Traction Engine Slides Down High Bank at Tyndall

Engineer Thrown From Machine Narrowly Escapes Serious Injury--Gravel Gives Way Beneath Weight of Machine Which Slides to Bottom--Is Slightly Damaged.

Ross McCullough, of Fresno, narrowly escaped serious injury when the traction engine he was driving slid over a twenty foot embankment at the canal bridge on the Wilson farm north of Tyndall Friday afternoon. The driver was thrown from the engine and badly bruised. It was first thought that he had sustained a fractured arm but an examination conducted by Dr. Smailes proved that the injury to the arm was a bad sprain.

The engine was used for threshing and belonged to Daniel Geese, of Fresno. Mr. Geese had been driving the machine but was relieved by McCullough a short time before the accident occurred.

Gravel Gives Way

The engine had just crossed the canal bridge when the front wheels caused the gravel fill to give way allowing the engine to fall on its side. The heavy machine slid to the bottom of the embankment and was only slightly damaged. Several teams of horses were used in pulling the engine back onto the road.

Children Find Body of Mother

Laporte, Ind., Aug. 6.—Mrs. John G. Eckstein, mother of six children under twelve years old, living near Hamlet, south of Laporte, twisted a rope over a bed post, looped the other end around her neck in a slip knot and threw herself forward, strangling herself. Previously she had sent her children out to play, telling them that they need not return for a long time.

The children returning from play half an hour later discovered the body of their mother but they did not understand why she did not talk to them and said that "Mamma is tied to the bed and won't talk to us." They asked the neighbor to come and "wake her up." The neighbors discovered what had happened, but the woman was past help. She had been morose and melancholy for some time.

Badly Injured by A Kicking Horse

While working in a hayfield at his farm near Spring Mountain, Andrew Fisher was kicked by a horse Friday morning, and severely injured. The horse's hoof struck Fisher on the right thigh cutting a huge gash and bruising the member so badly that it was necessary to remove him from the field to his home in a buggy. Dr. Wright, of Warsaw, who was summoned closed the wound with several stitches and made the injured man as comfortable as possible. The severe shock and the pain occasioned by the cut and bruises made Mr. Fisher quite ill during the day, but in the evening he was reported to be resting easily. No bones were broken.

Manning Funeral To Be Held Sunday Afternoon

Funeral services for Mrs. Bertha Manning, aged 50, will be held Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the home, on Ivy street. Interment will be made in Oak Ridge cemetery.

Mrs. Manning, wife of Thomas Manning, died Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock, following a long illness from cancer.

In addition to her husband she leaves two children, Mrs. Susan Hines, of Pleasant Valley; and William Manning, of the home; and the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. Nora Fiecoats, Mrs. Martha Clough, of Coshocton; Mrs. Sarah Bryant, of Conesville and Jasper Webb, of Conesville. Willis Ishmael, of Bridgeport is a half brother.

Mrs. Manning was born at Willow Brook, Virginia twp., in 1865. She was married twenty-seven years ago to Thomas Manning, who is employed at the glass plant.

Taller And Darker Are Women to be

San Francisco, Aug 6.—Taller, darker women clothed in more sensible dress will typify the "eugenic woman" of the future. Dr. A. J. Read, professor of hygiene in the Normal School of Physical Education at Battle Creek, Mich., today told the International Conference on Race Betterment at the Panama Pacific Exposition.

"The ideal woman of the eugenic age will be plump and well rounded, but not fat," said Dr. Read. "Her complexion will be ruddy or brown, not pale as that of present day women."

There are too many frills in the public schools and not enough instruction along practical lines, according to a paper read to the conference by Dr. Samuel G. Dixon, Commissioner of Health for the State of Pennsylvania. "The curriculum now used by our educators," Dr. Dixon said, "demands radical alteration. We are teaching much theory and not enough of the practical, every day occupations."

Dr. Dixon also discussed eugenics from the standpoint of sentiment. "We cannot afford," he declared, "to discourage sentiment in the selection of marriage."

New York, Aug 6.—One of the most interesting recent revelations of the German system of espionage has reached this city in a letter from Lorne Cameron, an officer of one of the first Canadian regiments to be transported to England. Cameron and the Canadian regiments sailed on a transport which left Montreal. Before leaving Cameron was asked if he would take charge of a young English girl who was returning home. The girl was placed in a stateroom with a nurse. The third day out, the young girl [illegible] in front of a [illegible] shaving. Paving Not Delayed By The Strike

"The action of nine men, who walked out Friday morning demanding an increase in wages, will have no effect upon the business whatever," said B. F. Cotter, president of the Coshocton Brick Company, Friday evening.

"The report that there might be a delay in the paving of Coshocton's streets where the product of the local company is being used, is absolutely without foundation. Nine men leaving our plant is like taking a drop of water out of a bucket and we can quickly get a thousand men to take their positions. The manufacturing and shipping will go on without interruption."

The nine men in question, struck Friday morning after their demand for an increase wage and shorter hours had been refused by Allan Holmes, superintendent of the plant. The men were receiving $1.75 for a ten hour day. Dissatisfied with this, they demanded a day wage of $2 for a nine hour day. This demand was made two weeks ago.

Friday morning another demand was made, and Superintendent Holmes told the nine men, if they were dissatisfied with their wages, "they could take their dinner-buckets and go home." They did so. The men were employed in removing the bricks from the kiln after burning.

Russians In Great Retreat Following Fall of Ivangorod

Slav Forces Face Complete Destruction--Occupation of Baltic Seaport, Riga, Matter of Few Hours--Germany Plans Stroke Which Will Astonish The World--Warsaw Silent.

Berlin, Aug. 6.—With the great Russian fortress of Ivangorod in their hands, the Austro-Germans are forcing the Russian armies to retreat everywhere, from the Baltic to Galicia. The Slav forces face destruction.

Ivangorod, protected by nine forts on the right bank of the Vistula and three on the left bank, 64 miles southeast of Warsaw, was captured by the Austrians Tuesday, according to official announcement at Vienna today.

Occupation of the great Russian Baltic seaport of Riga by a German army is now only a matter of hours.

Novo-Georgievsk, lying north of Warsaw and considered impregnable, is being hastily evacuated by the Russian garrison, falling back in the confusion to escape capture at the hands of the Bavarians who entered Warsaw.

Threaten Army Corps.

Gen. Von Hindenburg on the north and Gen. Mackensen on the south are smashing away against the Russian flanks, threatening the capture of whole army corps. The world has never witnessed such retreat.

In the north the Slavs are fighting with desperation to save the Warsaw-Petrograd railway toward which Gen. Von Buelow is battering his way.

Between these two wings the Slavs are falling back steadily in an attempt to wheel more than 1,000,000 men into a straight front to block the Teuton steam roller. Consequently the rout of whole Russian armies was predicted in military circles here today.

So engrossed is the German public in the mighty effort now being made to cut off the Russian retreat that there was little speculation here today regarding Germany's next move. In official circles the hint was dropped last night that the next stroke of the German armies will astonish the world.

From Warsaw itself little information had been received here today, but it was understood that the fleeing garrison was being hotly pursued.

This was taken to mean either that the Russians had not succeeded in destroying all the Vistula bridges in their hasty flight or that the Bavarian prince had held pontoons in readiness and had quickly bridged the stream.

At least 100,000 Russians, fighting in the angle whose apex rested on Novo Georgievsk fortress, are believed to be threatened with capture by a fall of the Polish capital. Retreat for them was possible only over two railways, both leading to the eastern suburbs of Warsaw.

Face Two Traps.

To take either of these after Warsaw had fallen was to deliver themselves into the hands of the Germans. To retreat over the plain in a northeasterly direction

Child Swallows Mercuric Oxide

Early Friday evening, the two year old son of Mr. and Mrs. William Bailey, of Locust street, drank a quantity of mercuric oxide or what is commonly known as "red precipitate." The parents learned what the child had done almost immediately and Dr. J. G. Smailes was summoned. Prompt action on the part of the physician pulled the child out of danger.

In common with all mercuric compounds, mercuric oxide or "red Precipitate" is very poisonous and had the child's action not been discovered and medical aid secured at once, it is quite probable that the result would have been fatal.

Grim Reaper Visits Home Third Time in Two Months

Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, exactly one week from the time of the funeral of her daughter, and seven weeks after that of her mother, the funeral of Mrs. Perry McDonald will be held at the Branch M. E. church.

Mrs. McDonald, aged 56, died at her home on route 6, at 1 o'clock Friday afternoon, following a stroke of appoplexy, which was the second one she had suffered since last Monday. A week ago Friday night, Mrs. Carey Ralston, a daughter of Mrs. McDonald's, died at the City hospital from a shock during an operation for appendicitis. This sudden grief following closely upon the death of her mother, Mrs. James Passmore, who died just seven weeks ago yesterday, is believed to have brought on the illness which resulted in Mrs. McDonald's death.

Last Monday, the day after the burial of her daughter, she was found by her husband lying unconscious in the back yard of their home, as a result of a stroke. She was thought to have been recovering from the effects of this first stroke and during the last few days had been able to be up about the house for short periods. Twenty minutes before her death she was walking about the house and had started for the porch when she fell to the floor and is believed to have died instantly.

The daughter, Mrs. Ralston, died just three weeks after her marriage. In addition to Mr. McDonald, there are left one daughter, Mrs. Nye Cunningham, of route 6; one son, Warren, of the home, and the aged father, James Passmore, of route 6. The sympathy of the entire community goes out to the grief stricken family, who have suffered so deeply in this series of bereavements.

Mrs. McDonald, for years, has been a faithful member of the Branch M. E. church and the funeral services will be held in the chapel, where she regularly attended services. Burial will be made beside her daughter and mother in the churchyard.

Small Boy Takes Ride

A sorrel horse belonging to Albert Nichols was taken from a post at the rear of the J. N. Wood property on Walnut street Friday afternoon by some unknown party and was later found by Officers Williams and Fentague in the possession of an eleven year old lad about three o'clock. Nichols had been working on Walnut street, when he discovered that the harness had been taken off the horse and that the animal and bridle were gone.

BURY CHILD.

The funeral services for the [illegible] months old child of Mr. and Mrs. Ragan Babcock, of [illegible], were held at Plainfield in the M. E. church Friday afternoon. The services were in charge of Rev. Morris and interment was made in the Plainfield cemetery.

Needle Pierces Woman's Hand

Mrs. M. H. Roberts, of Coshocton, was reported to be experiencing great pain [illegible] Friday and unless complications should ensue [illegible] it is thought that the accident which she suffered Thursday will have no serious results. While brushing a table, Mrs. Roberts caused a needle to enter her hand and wrist, leaving a piece imbedded in the fleshy part of the hand. Drs. Marshall and Lear removed the needle with the aid of an X-ray.

State Health Insurance is Being Boosted

In the current issue of the Public Health Journal, the monthly publication of the state board of health, Dr. E. F. McCampbell, secretary and executive officer, takes up the question of sickness insurance for all industrial workers of the state.

Health insurance under the direct supervision of the state would be a logical sequel to workmen's compensation insurance, Dr. McCampbell declares, adding "that the success of the compensation insurance [illegible] at least proves that the second phase of the insurance by the state would be well and successfully developed."

"Unlike the scheme of accident insurance, in which the employer bears the brunt of the burden," says Dr. McCampbell, "sickness insurance appears to be most successfully manipulated by a scheme which divides the cost equally between the employer, the employe and the state. Thus all persons who obtain a position must pay a certain small amount, a few pennies a week, usually, toward insurance against sickness. Likewise, the employer does the same for each worker whom he contracts for, and the state adds its [illegible].

"An immediate effect is to at once promote all measures which tend to keep down the causes for which the insurance has to be spent. We see the first fruits of the system in the 'safety first' propaganda which we have with us today. In like manner we would see an immediate and sudden expansion of all measures tending to prevent sickness and deaths from diseases, should state sickness insurance or social insurance covering sickness, be generally adopted.

"Sickness insurance means the [illegible] of the [illegible] more vital than ever [illegible] the question of the prevention of disease, and on this account we should expect great things to come of it."

WAIL FROM SHIPOWNERS.

Say There Is No Necessity of Government Owned Vessels.

New York, Aug. 6.—Steamship owners assert, in reply to Secretary McAdoo's promise to the cotton men that the Washington administration would revive the government ship purchase bill at the next session of congress, that there is even less reason now for the bill than when the war started a year ago. From their viewpoint, the situation in regard to the ship purchase bill is unchanged, and if the administration does foster it again, prediction was made that there will be even greater opposition to it than before.

In response to the secretary's charge that private capital will not provide American owned and operated ships deemed necessary for the commerce of the country, it was stated that the menace of the bill becoming a law is preventing private capital from investing in shipping. Private capital is ready and willing, steamship men said, to develop an American merchant marine which shall have a permanent place on the ocean if it can compete with foreign shipowners on an equal plane. But not only is the fear of the government's ship purchase bill holding capital back just now, according to prominent shipowners here, but also they realize that a government line eventually spreading to all trades means the end of their business.

Local shipping experts declared that there are more ships under American registery, more ships building in American yards, and that the service is better now than a year ago. They assert that the cry of the cotton men of the south for ships is a false one, that government owned ships now would be of no use to the cotton exports in the way of relief because of the war, and that the government ownership scheme is in the interest of a comparatively few persons who want to saddle on the whole country their own burdens.

Your Customers Are The Tribune's Readers

People may not walk by your windows every day, but they are almost sure to walk to the breakfast table six mornings a week with a copy of THE MORNING TRIBUNE in their hand.

If you have a BARGAIN OFFERING or a message of any kind for these people, the breakfast hour is THE PSYCHOLOGICAL MOMENT to deliver it. Their minds are then the clearest and most open to your suggestions of any hour of the day.

WINS FIGHT FOR CONSCRIPTION

Kitchener Said to Have Majority in British Cabinet.

London, Aug. 6.—Lord Kitchener conferred with Premier Asquith for the third time in four days. The war secretary has also held conferences with several other ministers of the coalition cabinet and a report is in general circulation that as a result of his efforts, the cabinet has practically decided upon a policy of conscription, or compulsory enrollment for military service.

No official announcement has yet been made, and it is possible that none will come before parliament reconvenes on Sept 14, but if by that time the Germans have not been checked in the eastern theater of war, it is probable that conscription will be deemed necessary.

Some members of the cabinet are said to oppose conscription in any form, but Lord Kitchener is reported to have gained the support of the most influential ministers.

Miners Strike In Belgium.

Havre, France, Aug. 6.—Miners in the Mons district have gone on a strike. According to reports received here, groups of miners clashed with German soldiers and a serious riot followed during which two German and seven miners were killed. Four battalions of the landsturm have been sent to Mons and two to Charleroi. Intense unrest is reported to prevail throughout that region. The rich Belgian coal mining district of which Mons is the center is called Borinage and the miners are known as Borains.

TY COBB A SOLDIER (?)

Not Yet, But Tyrus Is a Shriner and Shooter.

By Garrett Bonfield.

Tyrus Raymond Cobb, who swats .400 on the diamond, has a reputation as an .800 field shot.

TY COBB
Detroit Tiger Player.

Knowledge of this fact reached the Quaker City fans, so Ty was recently summoned to appear before the assembled multitude at the Athletic grounds, Philadelphia, and was presented with a handsome double-barreled shotgun.

Lest there be any thought that Ty has enlisted, let it be explained that his military-like cap is in reality a Shriner's fez, for the redoubtable swat artist is a member of the Mystic Shrine, and the ornate lid was placed on Ty's head for the shootin'-iron presentation when Potentate W. Freeland Kendrick, of Lu Lu Shrine, Philadelphia, said a few nice things about Ty when the gun was handed to the Tiger in the name of "Philadelphia friends."

When ball playing days are over for 1915, Tyrus Raymond will hie himself to his sunny Dixie Land, and in company with Stallings, "the miracle man" manager of the "World's Champion" Boston team, will try his hand at quail shooting.

Ty has done some trapshooting, and we are told he will likely go in for the inanimate "bird" sport after he has killed off most of the quail south of the Mason and Dixon line.

England Stops Using Gold.

London, Aug. 6.—In view of the importance of strengthening the gold reserves the treasury has instructed the postoffice and all public departments making cash payments to use notes instead of gold wherever possible, says a press bureau announcement. The public is earnestly requested in the interests of the nation to co-operate with the treasury in this policy by paying available gold to the postoffice and the banks and in making payments whenever possible in checks and notes instead of in gold.

PRISON GUARD KILLS CONVICT

War Crazed Austian Runs Amuck at Ohio Penitentiary.

Columbus, Aug. 6.—Georgel Bayso, an Austrian, serving an indeterminate sentence from Cuyahoga county for forgery, attempted to murder his cellmate, Roy Cole, a Licking county prisoner, and was shot to death by Earl Hostetter, a guard at the Ohio penitentiary.

Bayso was received on July 9 and confinement seemed to weigh upon his mind. Cole was awakened by a noise in his cell and he noticed that Bayso was frantically ripping his mattress to pieces and piling the sea moss filler in a heap before the cell door. A sheet was fantastically draped about his head and shoulders, so that only the eyes were visible. Cole called to him and attempted to arise from his bunk, but before he could do so Bayso leaped upon him and stabbed him repeatedly with a piece of sharpened bale wire.

Cole's cries for help brought Guard Hostetter. When the latter opened the cell door Bayso made a lunge at him, but was beaten off by the guard's fists. Cole warned Hostetter that Bayso was armed and the guard drew his revolver and ordered the maniac to throw up his hands. Instead, Bayso made another effort to reach Hostetter, who then shot him, the bullet entering the breast and causing instant death.

Cole was removed to the prison hospital [illegible] from loss of blood [illegible] twenty [illegible] wounds are of a dangerous nature.

After Cole recovered consciousness he declared that Bayso had boasted [illegible] of the success of Austrian arms in the campaign against Russia. He [illegible] and [illegible] in a dream [illegible] Franz Ferdinand, shot [illegible] Bosnia [illegible] never [illegible] nor had he ever [illegible] with him.

Hostetter was appointed from Adams county. His conduct was fully endorsed by Warden Thomas. Bayso was sent up for forging a pass out on a Cleveland [illegible], and Cole was serving an indeterminate sentence for shooting to kill a policeman.

Discover New Antiseptic.

Paris, Aug. 6.—Dr. Alexis Carrel of the Rockefeller institute of medical research and Dr. Henry D. Dakin of the Lister institute have discovered, after exhaustive experiments at the Compiegne military hospital, what they claim to be the ideal antiseptic. The most powerful antiseptic known to science is hypochlorite of lime, but its use is injurious to the tissues, owing to its alkalinity, and it does not keep. Drs. Dakin and Carrel have found these two defects are remedied respectively, by the addition of carbonate of lime and boric acid.

A large number of fans have signified their intention of accompanying the Feds to Tyndall in the [illegible] today. A great game is expected and the Feds realize that they will have to play a [illegible] game to beat their village cousins. Peggy Metiffen, Canal Lewisville's pride, will be in the Federal line-up holding down the first sack and the cleanup position in the batting order. "Katy" Hook will probably do a part of the slab work for the Feds. Wiggins and Gillam will also be used on the mound.

HERE'S PROOF

A Coshocton Citizen Tells of His Experience.

You have a right to doubt statements of people living far away but can you doubt Coshocton endorsement?

Read it:

Eli Fortune, retired farmer, 746 Vine St., Coshocton, says: "I had a severe pain in the small of my back. I was constantly annoyed by too frequent and painful passages of the kidney secretions, and often there was a burning pain. I was restless at night and in the morning I was all tired out. I got worried about my condition and doctored with three physicians, but didn't find benefit, in fact, I was getting worse all the time. Dizzy spells came on me and I couldn't walk far without becoming so tired that I had to sit down. Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at Siegrist & Williams' Drug Store, completely cured me."

POLITICAL HISTORY IN THE MAKING

It is doubtful if the standpat leaders of the Republican party have yet fully realized that, regardless of whether the Progressives return to the fold, they have permanently alienated untold thousands of former Republican votes; votes that McKinley twice relied on; votes that Roosevelt relied on; the kind of votes that saw Lincoln through the gloomy period of civil dissension and the kind of votes that really gave character to the party long after the party leadership was thoroughly discredited.

Victor Murdock, Hiram Johnson and former President Roosevelt have all come out in interviews recently declaring emphatically that the Progressives would not affiliate with the Republicans next year, but will call another party convention, name a ticket and enter the presidential sweepstakes with a determination to win. Both Roosevelt and Murdock favor Governor Johnson of California as the party nominee for president.

Whether the Progressives really put a ticket in the field, or decide to accept the sop the regular Republican standpat organization intends to throw out to them at the proper time, remains to be seen. The really significant fact in relation to the Progressives is this: They sincerely deplore the leadership into whose hands the Republican party has fallen; they know that this leadership deserves defeat and in the long run will be defeated in national contests oftener than it can hope to win; and that the only way to restore the Republican party to the confidence of the people and to ultimate power is to effect vital reforms in its principles and working machinery.

The Tribune gravely doubts whether the Progressives can ever hope to reform the Republican party, either from within or from without. There is room for two major political parties in this country, and no more, the one a progressive or liberal party, and the other a reactionary, or conservative party. There is need for these two vehicles to give expression to the political thought of our people, but there is really no need for any other party.

There is no question about the attitude of the dominant element in the Republican party leadership as constituted for the last thirty years—IT IS FRANKLY AND HONESTLY AND OPENLY REACTIONARY. The rank and file of the Republican party, however, is not more reactionary than the rank and file of the Democratic party, especially the southern wing of the Democratic party. But the principles which the Democratic party espouses, in theory at least, are decidedly more attractive to the progressive vote than the principles of the Penrose, Root, Smoot wing of the Republican party.

The real disturbing element in American politics today, however, is the Democratic party. There is no difficulty in determining where the Republican party stands. It is reactionary and proud of it. The Democratic leaders, on the other hand, profess with their mouths to believe in and uphold the principles of Thomas Jefferson, but in practice the majority of them are as ultra-reactionary as the most standpat Republican leaders ever dared to be, and to their everlasting shame they have too often co-operated with the Aldrich machine in congress for the undoing of really progressive measures.

With the advent of Bryan twenty years ago and the later entrance of Wilson, the radical wing of the Democrats has been in control of the national party machinery. They have not always been able to win elections, due to the treachery of the Sullivans and Taggarts and Baileys in their own ranks, but they have been able to force radical platform declarations on their national conventions for twenty years. If the shaking down and sifting out process goes on in American politics for the next ten years as rapidly as it has in the past, then the above two-party consummation will be effected.

But just at present the radical Republicans, as represented by the Progressive split in 1912, have prejudice against the Democratic party too thoroughly ingrained in their political natures to go over bag and baggage to the Democrats, while the reactionary Democrats, for similar reasons hesitate to seek their natural political affinity in the Republican party. The result is highly discordant elements in both parties which have served to keep politics in America in an unnatural condition for many years and which must perpetuate these conditions until there is a natural alignment of the discordant elements in the two parties.

It is this distrust on the part of radical Republicans of the sincerity of Democratic progressive professions and the inability of the really progressive Democratic leaders to land their organization high and dry on the immortal principles of Jefferson that accounts for the steadily increasing Socialist vote. Twenty years ago both parties scared their followers with the mere suggestion of socialism. Today the average voter will go to the polls and vote the Socialist ticket by way of protest and openly boast about it.

And if the reactionary control of Wall street and the powerful special interests is not broken within another decade or two there will be ushered into power in this country a really radical party, the Socialist party, which will be made the vehicle of certain reforms the people have long demanded. So far the people have taken their socialism in broken doses. Twenty-five years ago the Socialist party in America was demanding currency reform which would lessen and, ultimately entirely remove the power of private interests over the money of the people; it demanded the initative and referendum; it demanded the popular election of United States senators; it demanded primary nominations; it demanded federal regulation of manufactured food products; it demanded postal savings banks; it demanded that the express business be made an adjunct of the postoffice department. It demanded, of course, a lot of other things which it has not yet been able to obtain.

But the fact remains, that by some hook or crook the people have slowly secured certain reforms which the old party leaders fought down for a generation or more by branding them "socialistic." But the people have got beyond the stage where they are frightened by a mere name. And if certain other reforms are not secured through some old party agency in the next two decades they will be secured through the agency of a new party.

At the present juncture it looks as if the Democratic party were overlooking a safe bet. The radical thought of the country is more insistently demanding than ever before a party which can be relied on to fight its battles. The attitude of the dominant element of the Republican party is well known. The recent statements of Murdock, Roosevelt and Johnson clearly indicate that the Republican radicals will never go back.

The one practical, insistent question that confronts the Democratic party is: WHERE WILL THEY GO? They will gladly go to the Democratic party if that organization can cleanse itself of its Roots and Gardners and Penroses and Smoots. The old Republican party is no longer at the parting of the ways. It has chosen, whether wisely or not. Just now it is the Democratic party's move. IT IS THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY THAT STANDS AT THE PARTING OF THE WAYS. THE INTERESTING QUESTION IN AMERICAN POLITICS TODAY IS, WHICH ROAD WILL THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY CHOOSE?

A great many people are wondering why there are so many automobiles sold in the United States during a financial depression. Maybe that $100,000,000 which our tourists formerly spent "seeing Europe first" will account for it.

Some learned gentleman, whose name we have now forgotten, says fish are not fit to eat. No self-respecting newspaper man should ever print the name of this man, even if he should recall it.

Nearly every young man at some time in life is exceedingly anxious to learn what women think of him. To all such we would say that the very best way to find out is to marry one of them.

Dun's report says that "The tide of returning prosperity is rising higher each day." Hurry up, boys, and get your life preservers on before it's everlastingly too late to escape.

The trouble with city men when they try farming is that most of them go in for "fancy" farming and we never knew of a case where "fancy" farming showed any net earnings.

The Wise Guy says: when a man goes home late to dinner he expects to find it cold, but his wife is always ready to make it warm for him.

SOME FAILURES

By Walt Mason

A dozen failures sat and talked, before the county jail: their early hopes this life had mocked—why do so many fail? Well, two of them had never learned their promises to keep; so by Prosperity they're spurned, as being false and cheap. And two of them are men afraid they'd earn more than they drew, so now they're loafing in the shade, with naught on earth to do. And two of them had swollen heads—they knew more than the boss; so now they're lacking board and beds, each one a total loss. Those two would talk an endless streak, and whoop about their rights; they've gone [illegible] hungry for a week, and have no roost at nights. The two who're shedding tear for tear, are plunged in frightful woe, because one time they didn't hear the evening whistle blow. The last two of this seedy flock thought [illegible] they were due at eight o'clock, they'd [illegible]. They [illegible] clean, and in their pants [illegible] saying that they have no [illegible] Why [illegible]

TIMES HAVE CHANGED

He preached away for half a day, [illegible] Book [illegible], he howled and bluffed, [illegible] His [illegible] was hell; he would not [illegible] love the good [illegible] Now pastors plead and try to lead us [illegible] love and things above, and thus [illegible] vision. For Love is all this side the wall, dividing us from Aiden; and over there [illegible] "mansions fair," all souls with Love are laden. Love makes us blest of creeds the best—of life the hope and heaven; not threats of pain or hope of gain can guide our steps to heaven.

New York, Aug. 6.—After exhaustive search ever since Edward C. Kindred disappeared in his own automobile on Wednesday morning after drawing $[illegible] to meet the payroll of the company by which he was employed the police admitted that they had not discovered even a single clew to the whereabouts of the man.

"It's like trying to climb a smooth wall," said Captain William Deevy of the first branch detective bureau. "He was considered a model employe by all the members of the contracting firm of Booth & Flinn and among his fellow clerks he was called a prince of good fellows. So far all our investigation has proved is that both descriptions were correct.

"Kindred had a host of acquaintances but we can't locate any friends. He had an outside income of about $300 a month, but we don't know where it came from. I've been working on embezzlement cases in the detective bureau for twenty-nine years, but this is the first time I ever struck anything like this."

PEOPLES' FORUM

FINAL DESTINY OF NATIONS

Editor The Tribune:

When the Lord comes to establish his kingdom on earth, he will not find peace among the nations, but they will be engaged in fighting the battle of Armageddon in the valley of Jehosaphat in the Turkish Empire in Asia. The nations will not be prepared to receive him as King of kings and Lord of lords, but, on the contrary, we are told in Sacred Writ that "the nations were angry." "And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him." "And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God." Rev. 11:18; 19:19,15.

Paul tells us that just before the Lord comes the second time to deliver his own, the world is being deceived by the false doctrines of "peace and safety." 1 Thess. 5:3. The nations of this world will never crown Christ as their king. Some of our so-called reformers who are trying to induce people into the kingdom of God by the force of civil statutes, and to usher the kingdom of God into this world through the gateway of politics, are working on a plan that can only raise false hopes. This present world, with all its plans, is doomed, and all the nations of the earth are to be "broken to pieces together, and become like the chaff of the summer threshing floors."

The Saviour told his disciples that there would be signs in the heavens above and in the earth beneath whereby his followers were to know that his coming was "near, even at the door." Matt. 24:33. The driving of the Turk out of Europe was just to precede the battel of Armageddon, and at the termination of this battle the Lord was to smite the nations, dashing them "in pieces like a potter's vessel." Ps. 2:9. It seems, according to the human foresight, as if the European war was the prelude to the extinction of the Turkish Empire in Europe. But according to the prophecy in Dainel 11 and 12 and Revelation 16, the Turkish Empire was not only to come to its "end" in Europe, but also in Asia. According to the Bible, the battle of Armageddon is to be fought immediately after the Turkish Empire is "dried up."

The prophecy declares: "And he (the king of the north, or the Turk) shall plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain (in Jerusalem); yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him. And at that time shall Michael (Christ) stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people: and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Dan. 11:45; 12:1, 2.

Luther and his colaborers understood the fulfilment of this prophecy to constitute a sign of the end of the world. In speaking of this prophecy, the great Reformer said, "If we beat back the Turk, the prophecy of Daniel will be fulfilled and the end will be at hand. Then the day of judgement is surely at our doors."—"Martin Luther," by Gustav Freytag, page 11.

Hitherto England has helped Turkey to resist Russia's efforts to obtain possession of Constantinople and the Dardanelles, but today she helps Russia to drive out the Turk. In a remarkable speech delivered at the guildhall in the city of London, Nov. 9, 1914, the Prime Minister, Mr. Asquith, in response to a toast of His Majesty's ministers, said: "I wish to make it clear, not only to my fellow country-men, but to the world outside, that this is not our doing. It is in spite of our hopes and efforts—it is the Ottoman government that has drawn the sword, and which, I venture to predict, will perish by the sword. It is they and not we who have rung the death knell of Ottoman dominion, not only in Europe, but in Asia. . . . The Turkish Empire has committed suicide, and dug with its own hand its grave."—The Times (weekly edition), London, England, Nov. 13, 1914.

But let it be remembered that divine revelation has decreed the doom of the world when Turkey falls in Asia. The downfall of Turkey in Asia is the last trumpet blast announcing the death knell of all the nations at the battle of Armageddon. This is no time to put our trust in princes nor in riches. Our only hope is in God and his Son, through whose blood we have redemption from our sins by faith. The day of God is drawing nigh and hasteth greatly. Every one will then have to meet God at the judgment bar to give an account of himself. "Prepare to meet thy God."

Very sincerely yours,
G. C. Quillin,
Elder of the Seventh-day Adventist Church.

A MISLEADING NAME.

Editor The Tribune: ..

Ohio liquor interests have established headquarters in the Outlook Bldg., Columbus under the misleading name of the Ohio Temperance Union. The men in charge are H. R. Probasco, of Cincinnati, and W. L. Casedy, of Marion. Both are affiliated with the wet interests, Probasco having made Anti-Prohibition speeches during last year's campaign. However, their names or none other appear on the letter heads or literature of the Ohia Temperance Union.

An effort is being made by the Ohio Temperance Union to establish booths at county fairs and other places for the distribution of what it calls "temperance" literature. This literature, however, is attacks on prohibition and is a part of the campaign of the brewers to defeat prohibition. The name of the organization and its letters are designed to make the people believe it is a bona fide temperance movement when, in fact, it is exactly the opposite.

POLAND TO HAVE AUTONOMY.

Joint Proclamation Soon to Be Issued by Germany and Austria.

London, Aug. 6.—With the great Russian fortresses of Warsaw and Ivangorod captured and the fall of Riga, the capital of the Baltic provinces, imminent, the Austro-German onslaught has reached its height in the east, and the next step will be the German emperor's triumphant entry into the Polish capital. That event is likely soon to be followed by the pronouncement of a united and semi-autonomous Poland, embracing not only the territory wrested from the Russians, but the Austrian crown land of Galicia.

The occupation of Warsaw now is centering attention on a series of important events that are being arranged. First will be the selection of a German governor. Reports indicate the appointee will be a German prince, possibly a son of the German emperor or an Austrian archduke, who will be vested with authority akin to that which Napoleon gave to his brothers and to his marshals as kings of occupied territory.

Berlin reports a council to be held on Sunday will formulate a proclamation declaring Poland to be a semi-autonomous state, under joint German and Austro-Hungarian rule.

OHIO CROPS.

Wheat and Oats Run Far Ahead of Average Yield.

Columbus, Aug. 6.—The state crop report issued by the state board of agriculture, showing the condition of crops on Aug. 1, gives ground for still more optimism as to the Ohio wheat crop. It puts the prospect at [illegible]. The same figure is given as to the oats prospect. Potatoes are given as 106, apples at 50, peaches 71 and pears 61. The clover hay yield is put at 1 1-3 tons per acre and the quality [illegible]; the timothy hay prospect at [illegible].

But a discount of 25 cents per month will be allowed on all the above exchanges if payment is made in advance at the office on or before the 15th day of the month, this becoming effective, August 1, 1915.

along the Bug river was to face the danger of being cut off by a German advance over the Warsaw-Petrograd railway.

Before nightfall, the Russians who escaped from Warsaw are expected to have began arriving at Novo Minsk, 27 miles east of the capital. It was not expected that the Slavs would attempt any serious stand directly east of Praga.

German troops already are within artillery range of Riga, and German aeroplanes have dropped circulars in the heart of the town, announcing that the Germans are about to enter. The Russians in the Riga district are now maneuvering only with the object of making good their escape.

Erie Reporter Wounds Man Robbing House In Flood District.

Erie, Pa., Aug. 6.—Troops of the state constabulary patrol the flood section, enforcing strictly the regulations of the Pennsylvania health officers and the Erie city council in their search for bodies, went further into the great masses of wreckage piled along Mill creek by Tuesday's night flood.

Sensational rumors of looting keep the police busy. Guy Fond, a reporter on the Erie Dispatch, shot a man who was alleged to have been seen taking articles from a house that had been abandoned by its occupants. The man was taken to the hospital, where it was said he had been shot in the shoulder, but that his condition was not dangerous.

Efforts to relieve the distress continues with amazing success. A citizens' committee has been formed to care for those in actual want, and more than 400 are being fed in the rescue station on State street.

TEST LAKE VESSELS.

Whaleback at Chicago Successfully Passes Severe Inspection.

Chicago, Aug. 6.—One of the severest stability tests ever applied to a lake vessel was successfully passed by the whaleback Christopher Columbus. The vessel was taken outside the Chicago river harbor carrying 400 tons of sand in 100 pound sacks. At the start these sacks were evenly distributed and it left the harbor on an even keel.

When the steamer had passed the last breakwater all the water ballast tanks were emptied and a special crew of 100 deck hands was ordered to place every sack against the starboard rail over one of the upper decks.

The total list of the ship with 787,500 pounds of sand packed against the starboard rail was 17 degrees. The vessel was then righted and placed on an even keel by filling the port water ballast tanks and without shifting the sand.

The weight of the sand without the extra weight of moisture is equal to 5,687 passengers weighing 140 pounds each. Federal and city officials witnessed the test.

Girl Is Attacked.

Fostoria, O., Aug. 6.—Miss Blanche McCandless, twenty, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward McCandless, was attacked while visiting at the home of her sister, Mrs. LeRoy Dixon, two miles east of the city, by an unknown man, who threatened to kill her. She was found an hour later by her sister in the pantry of the farm residence, bound with a clothes line and her head wrapped in a table cloth. Marks of the assailant's fingers showed plainly on her throat and there was a bruise on her forehead where he had struck her with a clubbed shotgun. She will recover. Police are searching for the assailant, whom Miss McCandless was able to describe.

Reckless Driver Kills Woman.

Cleveland, Aug. 6.—An ambulance driven by a fifteen-year-old boy ran over Mrs. Edwin Potter, inflicting injuries which caused her death within half an hour. The horse-drawn vehicle was on its way to Lakeside hospital with a patient when the accident occurred.

OFFICES INTERLOCKING.

Columbus, Aug. 6.—Ohio miners and operators brought out in testimony before the state utilities commission that the Hocking Valley railroad, which charges 85 cents a ton for hauling Ohio mined coal from Armitage, Athens county, to Toledo, is owned by the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad, which covers large coal areas in West Virginia.

The Hocking charges from 55 to 68 cents a ton for hauling from Armitage to Toledo West Virginia coal originating in the Chesapeake and Ohio territory, it was also brought out.

By cross-examination of M. S. Connors, general manager of the Hocking, the attorneys for the Ohio miners and operators attempted to show that one-fifth of a cent a mile per ton covers all operating costs on the Hocking; in other words that 46 cents a ton from Armitage to Toledo covers all expenses and all above that received by the Hocking is "velvet."

It developed in the cross-examination of Connors that the Chesapeake and Ohio and Hocking have interlocking officers in more than one instance.

Because of the large amount of data various railroads have been asked to produce, the hearing was recessed until Tuesday, Aug. 17, by agreement of both sides.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—In the New York home of James Brood, Dawes and Riggs, his two old pensioners and cronies, await the coming of Brood's son Frederic to learn the contents of a wireless from Brood, but Frederic, after reading, throws it into the fire and leaves the room without a word.

CHAPTER II—Frederic tells Lydia Desmond, his fiancée, that the message announces his father's marriage and orders the house prepared for an immediate homecoming. Mrs. Desmond, the housekeeper and Lydia's mother, tries to calm Frederic's temper at the impending changes.

CHAPTER III—Brood and his bride arrive. She wins Frederic's liking at first meeting. Brood shows dislike and veiled hostility to his son.

CHAPTER IV—Lydia and Mrs. Brood meet in the jade-room, where Lydia works as Brood's secretary. The room, dominated by a great gold Buddha, Brood's father confessor, is furnished in oriental magnificence. Mrs. Brood, after a talk with Lydia, which leaves the latter puzzled, is disturbed by the appearance of Ranjab, the Hindu servant of Brood.

CHAPTER V—Mrs. Brood makes changes in the household and gains her husband's consent to send Mrs. Desmond and Lydia away. She tries to fathom the mystery of Brood's separation from his first wife before her death, and his dislike of his son, but fails.

CHAPTER VI—Mrs. Brood fascinates Frederic. They visit Lydia and her mother in their new apartment. Mrs. Brood begins to fear Ranjab and his uncanny appearances and disappearances and Frederic, remembering his father's East Indian stories and firm belief in magic, fears unknown evil.

CHAPTER VIII—Frederic's father, jealous, unjustly orders his son from the dinner table as drunk. Yvonne follows Frederic to the jade-room and persuades him to apologize to his father and the guests for his alleged lapse, which puzzles the father. Brood tells the story of Ranjab's life to his guests. "He killed a woman" who was unfaithful to him.

CHAPTER IX — Yvonne plays with Frederic's infatuation for her, and when her husband warns her that the thing must not go on tells him that he still loves his dead wife, whom he drove from his home, through her, Yvonne. He calls her a sorceress.

CHAPTER XV—Mrs. Desmond in her turn tries to get to Brood to intercede with him for Frederic, but is prevented by Yvonne, who tells her that she is too late, as the two men are now together and Brood is telling Frederic.

CHAPTER XVI—Brood tells Frederic the story of his dead wife and the music master. Yvonne tells Brood he has struck a man sleeping, and that his own heart needs breaking.

CHAPTER XVII—Yvonne goes to Frederic in the jade-room and asks him to go away with her. He refuses. She faints, then tempts him. Brood comes through the doorway. Ranjab is behind him.

CHAPTER XVIII—Brood shoots at Yvonne and wounds Frederic. Yvonne commands the situation. Brood thinks she is his dead wife, and Ranjab says he sees the dead in her eyes.

All this time, Yvonne was crouching against the table, her horrified gaze upon the great red blotch that grew to terrible proportions as she watched. She had not moved, she had not breathed, she had not taken her hands from her ears where she had placed them at the sound of the explosion.

"Blood! It is blood!" she moaned, and for the first time since the shot was fired her husband glanced at the one for whom the bullet was intended.

An expression of incredulity leaped into his face, as if he could not believe his senses. She was alive and unhurt! His bullet had not touched her. His brain fumbled for the explanation of this miracle.

"Blood!" she wailed again, a long, shuddering word that came not from her lips but from the very depths of her terror-stricken soul.

Slowly Brood's mind worked out of the maze. His shot had gone straight, but Frederic himself had leaped into its path to save this miserable creature who would have damned his soul if life had been spared to him.

Ranjab crawled to his side, his eyes covered with one arm, the other extended. Blindly the master felt for the pistol, not once removing his eyes from the pallid figure against the table. His fingers closed upon the weapon. Then the Hindu looked up, warned by the strange voice that spoke to him from the mind of his master. He saw the arm slowly extend itself with a sinister hand directed straight at the unconscious figure of the woman. This time Brood was making sure of his aim—so sure that the little Hindu had time to spring to his feet and grasp once more the hand that held the weapon.

"Master! Master!" he cried out.

Brood turned to look at the man in sheer bewilderment. What did all this mean? What was the matter with the man?

"Down, Ranjab!" he [illegible] a low, [illegible] hand [illegible] gone was [illegible]

"There is but [illegible]" cried the Hindu.

[illegible] the master [illegible]

"You have killed [illegible] himself."

"Yes! Yes! [illegible]—but she! She lives! She—"

The Hindu struck his own breast significantly. "Thy faithful servant remains, sahib. Ha, if that will but leave her to Ranjab. There is but one bullet left. It is for you. You must not be here to witness the death Ranjab, thy servant, shall inflict upon her. Shoot thyself now, if so be it, but spare thyself the sight of—" He did not finish the sentence, but his strong, bony fingers went through the motion that told a more horrible story than words could have expressed. There was no mistaking his meaning. He had elected himself her executioner.

A ghastly look of comprehension flitted across Brood's face. For a second his mind slipped from one dread to another more appalling. He knew this man of his. He remembered the story of another killing in the hills of India. His gaze went from the brown fanatic's face to the white, tender, lovely throat of the woman and a hoarse gasp broke from his lips.

"No! No! Not that!" he cried, and as the words rang out, Yvonne removed her horrified gaze from the blot of red and fixed it upon the face of her husband. She straightened up slowly and her arms fell limply to her sides.

"It was meant for me. Shoot, James!" she said, almost in a whisper.

"Shoot!" she repeated, raising her voice. "Save yourself, for if he is dead I shall kill you with my own hands. This is your chance—shoot!"

Brood's fingers relaxed their grip on the revolver. A fierce, wild hope took all the strength out of his body—he grew faint with it.

"God, he—he can't be dead! I have not killed him. He shall not die—he shall not—" Flinging the Hindu aside he threw himself down beside the body on the floor. The revolver as it dropped, was caught in the nimble hand of the Hindu, who took two long swift strides toward the woman who now faced him instead of her husband. There was a great light in his eyes as he stood over her and she saw death staring out upon her.

But she did not quail. She was past all that. She looked straight into his eyes for an instant and then, as if putting him out of her thoughts entirely, turned slowly toward the two men on the floor. The man half raised the pistol, but something stayed his hand—something stronger than any mere physical opposition could have done.

He glared at the half-averted face, confounded by the most extraordinary impression that ever had entered his incomprehensible brain. Something strange and wonderful was transpiring before his very eyes—something so marvellous that even he, mysterious seer of the Ganges, was stunned into complete amazement and unbelief. That strange, uncanny intelligence of his, born of a thousand mysteries, was being tried beyond all previous exactions. It was as if he now saw this woman for the first time—as if he had never looked upon her face before. A mist appeared to envelop her and through this veil he saw a face that was new to him—the face of Yvonne and yet not hers at all. Absolute wonder crept into his eyes.

As if impelled by the power of his gaze, she faced him once more. For what seemed hours to him, but in reality only seconds, his searching eyes looked deep into hers. He saw at last the soul of this woman and it was not the soul he had known as hers up to that tremendous moment. And he came to know that she was no longer afraid of him or his powers. His hand was lowered, his eyes fell and his lips moved but there were no words, for he addressed a spirit. All the venom, all the hatred fled from his soul. His knee bent in sudden submission and his eyes were raised to hers once more, but now in their somber depths was the fidelity of the dog!

"Go at once," she said, and her voice was as clear as a bell.

He shot a swift glance at the prostrate Frederic and straightened his tall figure as would a soldier under orders. His understanding gaze sought hers again. There was another command in her eyes. He placed the weapon on the table. It had been a distinct command to him.

"One of us will use it," she said monotonously. "Go!"

With incredible swiftness he was gone. The curtains barely moved as he passed between them and the heavy door made no sound in opening and closing. There was no one in the hall. The sound of the shot had not gone beyond the thick walls of that preserved room on the top floor. Somewhere at the rear of the house an indistinct voice was uttering a jumbled stream of French.

Many minutes passed. There was [illegible] Brood [illegible] outstretched figure of his [illegible] the [illegible] for [illegible] years [illegible] hands and [illegible] first [illegible] heart. [illegible] blood [illegible] A dark [illegible] possessed his soul. He knelt [illegible] by the shock of discovery. [illegible] light he no longer saw the features of Matilde, but his own, and his heart was still. In [illegible] he realized that he had never seen anything in Frederic's countenance save the dark, never-to-be-forgotten eyes—and they were his Matilde's. Now those eyes were closed. He could not see them, and the blindness was struck from his own. He had always looked into the boy's eyes—he had never been able to seek farther than those haunting, inquiring eyes—but now he saw the lean, strong jaw, and the firm chin, the straight nose and the broad forehead—and none of these were Matilde's! These were the features of a man—and of but one man. He was seeing himself as he was when he looked into his mirror at twenty-one!

All these years he had been blind, all these years he had gone on cursing his own image. In that overpowering thought came the realization that it was too late for him to atone. His mind slowly struggled out of thrall that held it stupefied. He was looking at his own face—dead! He would look like that! Matilde was gone forever—the eyes were closed but he was there, going grayer and grayer of face all the time.

He had forgotten the woman. She was standing just beyond the body that stretched itself between them. Her hands were clasped against her breast and her eyes were lifted heavenward. She had not moved throughout that age of oblivion.

He saw her and suddenly became rigid. Slowly he sank back, his eyes distended, his jaw dropping. He put out a hand and saved himself from falling, but his eyes never left the face of the woman who prayed—whose whole being was the material representation of prayer. But it was not Yvonne, his wife, that he saw standing there. It was another—Matilde!

"My God, Matilde—Matilde! Forgive! Forgive!"

Slowly her eyes were lowered until they fell full upon his stricken face.

"Am I going mad?" he whispered hoarsely. As he stared, the delicate wan face of Matilde began to fade and he again saw the brilliant, undimmed features of Yvonne. "God in heaven, it was Matilde! What accursed trick of—"

He sprang to his feet and advanced upon her, actually stepping across the body of his son in his reckless haste. For many seconds they stood with their faces close together, he staring wildly, she with a dull look of agony in her eyes, but unflinching. What he saw caused an icy chill to sweep through his tense body, and a sickness to enter his soul. He shrank back.

"Who—who are you?" he cried out in sudden terror. He felt the presence of Matilde. He could have stretched out his hand and touched her, so real, so vivid was the belief that she was actually there before him. "Matilde was here—I saw her before God. I saw her. And—and now it is you! She is still here. I can feel her hand touching mine—I can feel—no, again. I—I—"

The cold, lifeless voice of Yvonne was speaking to him, huskier than ever before.

"Matilde has been here. She has always been with him. She is always near you, James Brood."

"What — are — you — saying?" he gasped.

She turned wearily away and pointed to the weapon on the table.

"Who is to use it, you or I?"

He opened his mouth but uttered no sound. His power of speech was gone.

She went on in a deadly monotone. "You have fed the bullet for me. It is not too late. Kill me, if you will. I give you the first chance—take it, for if you do not I shall take mine."

"I—I cannot kill you—I cannot kill the woman who stood where you are standing a moment ago. Matilde was there!" She was alive, do you hear me! Alive and—ah!" The exclamation fell from his lips as she suddenly leaned forward, her intense gaze fixed on Frederic's face.

"See! Ah, see! I prayed and I have been answered. See! God in heaven, see!"

"Matilde Had Been There."

He turned. Frederic's eyes were open. He was looking up at them, with a piteous appeal in their depths—an appeal for help, for life, for consciousness.

"He is not dead! Frederic, Frederic, my son—" He dropped to his knees and frantically clutched at the hand that lay stretched out beside the limp figure. The pain-stricken eyes closed slowly.

Someone knelt beside Brood. He saw a slim white hand go out and touch the pallid brow.

"I shall save your soul, James Brood," a voice was saying, but it seemed far away. "He shall not die. Your poor wretched soul may rest secure. I shall keep death away from him. You shall not have to pay for this—no, not for this. The bullet was meant for me. I owe my life to him. You shall owe his to me. But you have yet to pay a greater debt than this can ever become. He is your son. You owe another for his life—and you will never be out of his debt, not even in hell, James Brood!"

Slowly Frederic's eyes opened again. They wavered from the face to the other and there was in them the unsolvable mystery of [illegible]ation. As the lids dropped once more, Brood's manner underwent a tremendous change. The stupefaction of horror and doubt fell away in a flash and he was again the clear-headed, indomitable man of action. The blood rushed back into his veins, his eyes flashed with the returning fire of hope, his voice was steady, sharp, commanding.

"The doctor!" he cried in Yvonne's ear, as his strong fingers went out to tear open the red shirt bosom. "Be quick! Send for Hodder. By heaven, we must save him." She did not move. He whirled upon her fiercely. "Do as I tell you! Are you so damned—"

"Doctor Hodder is on the way now," she said dully. His hands ceased their operations as if checked by a sudden paralysis.

"On the way here?" he cried incredulously. "Why—"

"He is coming," she said fiercely. "I sent for him—ages ago. Don't stop now—be quick! You know what to do. Stanch the flow of blood. Do something, man! You have seen men with mortal wounds—and this man must be saved."

He worked swiftly, deftly, for he did know what to do. He had worked over men before with wounds in their breasts—and he had seen them through the shadow of death. But he could not help thinking, as he now worked, that he was never known to miss a shilling at thirty paces.

She was speaking. Her voice was low and husky once more, with a persistent note of accusation in it. "It was an accident, do you understand? You did not shoot to kill—him. The world shall never know the truth—unless he dies, and that is not to happen. You are safe. The law cannot touch you, for I shall never speak. This is between you and me. Do you understand?"

He glanced at her set, rigid face. "Yes. It was an accident. And this is between you and me. We shall settle it later on. Now I see you as you are—as Yvonne. God, I—wonder—" His hand shook with a sudden spasm of indecision. He had again caught that baffling look in her dark eyes.

"Attend!" she cried, and he bent to the task again. He is not going to die. It would be too cruel if he were to die now and miss all the joy of victory over you—his life-long foe. He—"

The door opened behind them and they looked up to see the breathless Hindu. He came straight to the woman.

"He comes. Ranjab has obey. I have told him that the revolver was discharge accidentally—by myself, by the unhappy son of a dog. I. It is well. Ranjab is but a dog. He shall die today and his lips be sealed forever. Have no fear. The dead shall be silent—" His voice trailed off into a whisper, for his eyes were looking into hers. "No," he whispered, after a moment—"no, the dead are not silent. One who is dead has spoken to Ranjab."

"Hush!" said the woman. Brood's hands were shaking again, shaking and uncertain. "The doctor! He comes!"

"Even now," said the Hindu, turning toward the door.

CHAPTER XIX.

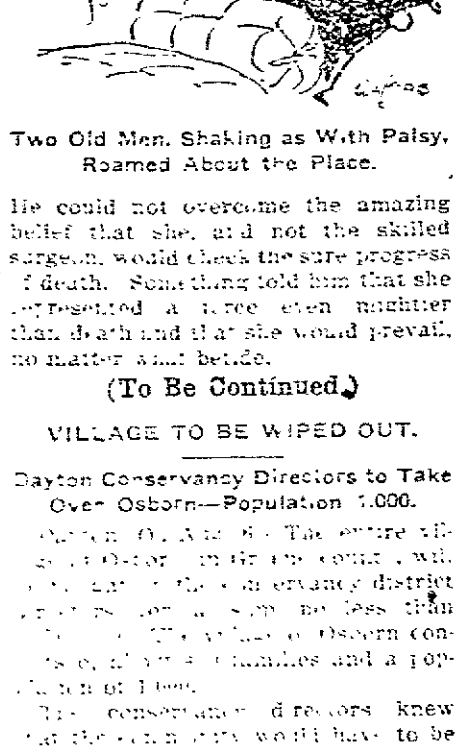
The Voice of the Wind.

Hours afterward Brood sat alone in the room where the tragedy occurred. Much had transpired in the interim to make those hours seem like separate and distinct years to him, each hour an epoch in which a vital and memorable incident had been added to his already overfull measure of experience. Underneath all was an ever-present sense of insecurity, as if the whole order of life had been suddenly deprived of foundation or support. No matter where he looked, there was not the slightest ray of light in the darkness that [illegible]d his understanding. Something tremendous had happened, not merely the visible, physical incident that had stunned him temporarily at the outset of the tragedy, something that was beyond comprehension and intangible and which continually [illegible] up before him as a specter that had neither shape nor substance and yet was as completely positive as anything else that had transpired. He could account for the shooting, the emotions preceding that unhappy occurrence, the intervention of fate that saved Yvonne from death and laid low the substitute, the sense of horror that caused the sudden revelation that came to him as he looked into Frederic's face with its closed eyes, and the agony of suspense that now consumed him, but a cloud still hung over him that his intelligence could not penetrate nor his physical being dispel, no matter how hard he struggled to clear a way to the open.

He had seen a vision. Its effect on him had been overpowering. The fortitude of a lifetime had been shattered in a single instant of contact with the influence that had at last made itself felt in physical manifestation after all these years of spiritual attendance. He had never been completely free from the vague notion that Matilde was near him in spirit, that there was an actual identity to the presence that filled his dreams and denied him the boon of forgetfulness for a single instant of the hours when he was awake. He had never tried to banish her from his memory. He wanted to forget her, to put her out of his thoughts altogether, for obvious reasons, but the fact that she remained the dominant figure in his present despite the past was proof, even to him, that she was and always would be the controlling force in his mind if not in his heart.

Now he was ordering himself to face new complexities. He was confronted by the most improbable of hallucinations. It was not an intangible shadow that he now had to contend with but something definite, something that took shape and mocked him. In his bitter indictment against circumstances, he argued that his brain was momentarily unbalanced following the shock caused by the shooting, and that in its disordered state he had pictured things that did not exist. It was only reasonable to assume that he had suffered from the effect of a startling, vivid hallucination, and yet there was a strange, insistent voice somewhere in his clearing mind that persuaded him against his will that he had actually seen the face of Matilde.

Admitting that he had been deceived by a trick of the imagination, there still remained certain indisputable facts to confound him. First of all, the absolute conviction that Yvonne had the power to preserve the life that hung so precariously in the balance.



Two Old Men, Shaking as With Palsy, Roamed About the Place.

He could not overcome the amazing belief that she, and not the skilled surgeon, would check the sure progress of death. Something told him that she represented a force even mightier than death and that she would prevail, no matter what betide.

BOSTON WOOL

Boston, Mass., Aug. 6.—The Commercial Bulletin will say tomorrow:

"The wool market has been somewhat quieter the past week, but, on the whole, a fair volume of business has been accomplished. Prices are firm but no higher.

"Reports from the good market are somewhat conflicting, but generally reassuring and advices from the mills indicate an increasing occupation of machinery. Prices in the west are strong. English markets have been slow and barely steady.

CLAIM HE IS SPY.

Former Member of British Commons Held On Forgery Charge.

New York, Aug. 6.—Ignatius Timothy Trebitsch Lincoln—the Lincoln part of his name he says he assumed legally in England—one time member of the British house of commons, but later said to be a German spy, was committed to the Raymond street jail by United States District Judge Van Vecten Veeder in Brooklyn, following his arrest on a forgery charge. The charge, according to treaties between the United States and Great Britain, is extraditable, and the prisoner may not be freed on bail pending the arrival of papers from London. Trebitsch, or Lincoln, as he prefers to be known, insisted that the forgery charge against him has been suddenly trumped up by Great Britain so that he may be taken back to English soil and shot as a spy.

The mayor says that free speech, as regards labor difficulties, will not be had on public or private property in Bridgeport.
